Polmont Old Parish Churchyard

Introduction

The medieval parish of Falkirk was huge and that created difficulties for those attempting to get to the church in the winter months. Over the centuries new parishes were carved out of the territory and in 1649 proposals were made to establish a church in the eastern part of the parish of Falkirk in the vicinity of Polmont. It was only in 1731 however that construction began on a new church on a greenfield site just south of Cadger's Brae (the main road from Falkirk to Bo'ness). This meant the creation of a new cross road connecting the Cadger's Brae to a relatively recent turnpike road to the south (see Roy's Great Map) – now appropriately known as Kirk Entry. Land was bought for the church, manse, glebe and a churchyard. The position of the stone church within its early enclosure clearly shows that from the beginning there was an intention to have a burial ground associated with it. Liberty to bury in the churchyard was granted by the presbytery on 22 October 1735, though the first burial appears to have taken place in January the previous year when I. Shaw died at the age of 77 years. The stone depicts a leather worker's half-moon knife under a crown indicating that he was an artisan of an incorporated trade (No. 17).

The churchyard was surrounded by a tall boundary wall with entrances to the east and west. That on the east opened onto the new road and was the main one. Both entrances had internally curving wing walls terminating in substantial gate posts surmounted by ball finials as shown in the illustration above. The eastern forecourt thus created provided a turning circle for carriages. From its gate a raised drive led to the wooden porch at the centre of the east gable of the church and a path led around the north side to steps leading up to the lofts. Trees were planted along the west, north and south sides of the graveyard, but by 1786 they were an inconvenience. They were also large enough by then to provide a commercial return and were put up for sale by roup. Part of the money from this had to go to repair the boundary walls.

South of the main gate, with their backs to the boundary wall, a series of walled tombs was erected for the landed families of the parish. These included the Livingstones of Westquarter. A similar series came to be placed against the west boundary wall, and the north wall was studded with the occasional enclosure, including that of Patrick Bennet, the first minister of Polmont, who died in 1783.

Polmont was a sizeable parish and so to aid with the conveyance of the dead to the churchyard in was decided to invest in a hearse. In February 1772 "articles concerning a carriage for the dead in the Parish of Polmont" were drawn up. They were as follows:

It is proposed that as a Hearse is bought at the rate of thirty pound Sterling for transporting the dead, the following articles are offered to the consideration of the subscribers & kirk-session:

- 1.It is proposed that the value of the Hearse is to be payed by the subscribers & kirk-session and a house built for holding the same equally betwixt them.
- 2.The subscribers is to pay half when they use the Hearse of what a stranger is to pay which is ten shillings Ster: & the subscribers five shillings.
- 3.The poor of the Parish are to have the whole benefit of the Hearse they upholding the same & the house that contains it.
- 4.If a subscriber employ the hearse out of the Parish they shall pay one shilling per mile & a stranger two shillings.

5.If the kirk-session is not concerned with the hearse the subscribers to use it within the Parish gratis.

The hearse house stood in the north-east corner of the graveyard with vehicular access to the road. It was eventually demolished in 1865 and the boundary wall straightened. By this time it had been replaced by a building in the Back Row of the village. At the same time the old churchyard entrance was rebuilt, removing the forecourt, and the pillars were set flush with the boundary wall with a new iron gate.

In 1844 land was acquired to the south of the churchyard upon which to erect a larger church building. The south wall of the churchyard was demolished and a new one constructed further south in 1845 at a cost of £57.18s. A new gateway and railings to the east of the new church, from James McLaren of Grangemouth, cost £2.9.2. Twenty five carts of small gravel were brought in from a pit at Laurieston for the paths.

The Resurrectionists

In the first decades of the nineteenth century newly buried bodies from the churchyards across central Scotland were illicitly dug up for sale to the medical professionals at Edinburgh for dissection. To counter such activities many churches established mutual aid groups of volunteers who would keep a watch over the graveyard for a short period after an interment had taken place. Some of these groups also acquired mortsafes – iron coffins into which the wooden one was inserted. These were lowered into the ground with a block and tackle and after several weeks, when the body was no longer of use to the surgeons, the iron outer shell would be retrieved. James Love mentions the discovery of one of these mortsafes at Polmont: "...and in the churchyard of Polmont, in March, 1904, while a grave was being opened, there was discovered, when six feet down, the frame of a coffin measuring six feet six inches by two feet, made of malleable iron bars bolted together. The coffin itself had evidently been secured inside, as small pieces of wood were still adhering to some of the bolts."

Love also relates a famous case of bodysnatching which occurred in 1823: "About five o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 19th March, 1823, a servant of Mr Scott, farmer at Gilston, near Polmont was returning home, when he saw two men taking something from a dunghill which lay in a park belonging to his master's farm, near the side of the Edinburgh

Road, which he at first thought might be smuggled whisky. His curiosity being excited, he watched their movements attentively, and soon observed them drag something like a dead body over the dyke to a gig that stood nearby, and this he thought he saw them repeat a second and third time. He immediately hastened to the farm and informed his master what he had seen. Mr Scott, who had for some time previous been suspicious that bodies had been disinterred from the churchyard of Polmont, immediately mounted a horse and went instantly in pursuit. Having ascertained that they had taken the high road towards Edinburgh, he galloped after them as fast as he could, and came in sight of the gig a little to the west end of Linlithgow. Here he saw one of the men come down from the gig and walk along that road. Mr Scott continued on closely, and meeting some of his acquaintances at Linlithgow, he desired them to follow him; this having been done, the party came up with the gig in the middle of the town. Mr Scott then rode in front of the gig, and, turning smartly round, placed himself before it, demanding the driver to stop and deliver up what unaccustomed goods he suspected he had in his possession. This the man refused to do till a warrant was produced. Mr Scott consequently ordered some of the bystanders to detain the gig and driver while he went in quest of a warrant. The other person who had descended from the gig at the entrance to the town, having become alarmed, escaped to the high ground, and was not seen again. An immense crowd of people had now collected from all quarters of Linlithgow, and without waiting Mr Scott's return with the warrant demanded, immediately began, without ceremony, to satisfy their curiosity and search the gig, when, to their horror, no fewer than three dead bodies were found in it - that of a man, a woman, and a female child. The indignation of the populace knew no bounds, they tore the driver from his seat, with every imprecation they could invent, beating and kicking him so unmercifully, that his life was only saved with difficulty. The gig also, with all its furniture, was broken to pieces, and burned, with the driver's mantle, at the Cross of Linlithgow. Towards Mr Scott the crowd was actuated by very different feelings; they bore him about in triumph on their shoulders in approbation of his spirited activity in making so complete an exposure of the barbarous outrage. The tumult was great, and it was remarked that "never was there sic a steerie in Lithgo' sin' the burnin' o' the Covenant." The driver was lodged in jail, and the bodies deposited in the Town House to be claimed by their relations. The body of the woman had been exhumed from Larbert Churchyard, and on its journey through Falkirk to be re-interred the impression made upon the inhabitants of our town is said to have been singularly solemn. The indignation of the populace of Linlithgow was not easily quelled, and on the evening following the discovery of the outrage they gathered in large numbers with hammers and other implements to break open the jail, intending to mete out Jeddart justice on the culprit. On the following day, it is said, a party set off for Carron for the purpose of obtaining a reinforcement from the works to enable them to put their threats into execution, but on the removal of the prisoner to Edinburgh the people quietened down."

[Love, Volume 1]

The Resurrectionists were naturally careful to cover their tracks and it was often years after their activities took place that their deeds were discovered. One such incident took place in 1818 but only came to light eleven years later, making newspaper headlines: "MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE – A melancholy accident occurred at the village of Redding, near Falkirk, on Tuesday the 3d inst. Robert Archibald, who kept a public house there, had for two months past shown symptoms of mental derangement. Lately he became quite outrageous; and having on the day above mentioned escaped from his house, although closely watched, he made his way to the mouth of a neighbouring coal-pit. His wife and daughter instantly followed, and seized the skirts of his coat when he was about to take the fatal leap; but in spite of their utmost efforts to retrain him, he threw off his coat and plunged into the pit. He was taken out lifeless and dreadfully mangled. When a grave was dug for him in Polmont Churchyard, the coffin of one of his children, who had been buried eleven years before, was found empty, no doubt the sacrilegious work of a resurrectionist – and this circumstance must have added greatly to the misery of the afflicted widow." (Stirling Journal 18 November 1829, reprinted from the Inverness Courier).

James Robertson had his recollections published by the Falkirk Herald: "I recollect of one body disappearing from the Polmont Churchyard. A child belonging to the gardener employed by Miss Spiers died, and was buried there. On the following Sunday the parents went to the grave to view the place where their little one was supposed to be lying, and were astonished to observe very distinct evidences that the grave had been tampered with. They had it opened, and to their horror the grieved parents discovered that the coffin and child were gone. No trace of it was ever obtained. In those days people took turns in watching the churchyard with loaded guns, and as my uncle had lairs in Polmont Churchyard, he also took his turn with the watcher." (Recollections of James Robertson of Laurieston, Falkirk Herald 16 August 1902).

The Resurrectionists often had local help and at Polmont it was suspected that this came from the beadle. There was a row of houses in Polmont called Resurrection Row which was built by the then gravedigger and beadle of the parish church during this period. It was not every gravedigger who could afford to build property and the Polmont gravedigger was not considered wealthy – hence why local people christened his houses Resurrection Row (ibid).

Churchyard Extensions

Illus 5: Plan showing the various extensions to the graveyard at Polmont. A - 1734; B - 1844; C - 1908; D - 1939; E - 1970s; F - 2014. These are now separated from the manse by the motorway.

By 1864 the churchyard was almost full to overflowing. On 14 April that year the Falkirk Herald printed the following notice: "In order to secure the accuracy of the Register of Claims to Right of Burial in Polmont Churchyard, all parties having such are requested to supply themselves with Schedules of Claim, to be filled up and returned, which may be had on application to the Session-Clerk. By order of the Heritors, R.W. Durwood, Sess. Clk. Polmont, 13th April 1864." The idea was to weed out those families who had moved out of the area. A small area of land to the west of the 1844 church was also acquired (B on illus 5) and the southern boundary wall straightened to incorporate it. This provided a little additional burial ground.

In 1890 the Polmont Parochial Board, who had taken over the responsibility of the graveyard from the Heritors, considered having an extension to Polmont Churchyard of 1.5 acres to the west (FH 5 March 1890). However, the Board soon came up with the tricky problem of retaining the legal amount of land for the minister's glebe. To overcome this it proposed an excambion of land in the glebe west of the churchyard for land contiguous and north of the glebe consisting of 2 roods 10 poles (FH 15 July 1893). The minister agreed to the exchange, but things moved slowly and it was only in 1908 that offers were invited for the building of a retaining wall on the north side of the new extension against Cadger's Brae (FH 8 May 1908). The previous west boundary wall was removed and the walled tombs here also began to disappear. Formal paths appeared in the additional burial ground, along with shrubs, and the area took on the appearance of a well maintained public park (C on illus 5). In 1927 six seats were purchased by Grangemouth Council from Falkirk Iron Company at £2.2s each, including delivery (FH 16 April 1927). It was thought that the extension would prove adequate for half a century or so.

It did not and in 1933 two schemes were put forward for the Eastern No 2 District of the County Council by Wilson & Tait for the extension of Polmont Churchyard - the larger consisting of 1.9 acres costing a total of £750 for the land, making it up, levelling it and forming a separate road entrance. The land was to cost £136 per acre (FH 30 September 1933). In 1938 Ramsay Brothers built the boundary walls (FH 29 July 1938) and in July 1939 it was formally opened (D on illus 5; FH 29 July 1939). An entrance off Cadger's Brae led to a carriageway and a "turntable". From this provision was made for a road running through to Kirk Entry. The scheme eventually cost £1,864 and the additional 1.36 acres provided 1,045 lairs with a retail value of £2,645. The turntable was designed for flower beds, but in September 1968 the war memorial from Polmont was re-built within it. It had stood near Polmont Station, but the re-alignment of the road there meant that it had to be moved (Bailey 1994, 52).

The Second World War had a direct impact upon the graveyard at Polmont. The churchyard formed part of an extensive stop line to halt an enemy advance on RAF Grangemouth from the south. In 1942 twenty gun loops were inserted into the south boundary wall. They would have been used by members of the Home Guard from throughout the Falkirk district who had been instructed to prevent the airfield from falling into German hands (Bailey 2008, 115).

Burials

There are many famous people buried in the churchyard at Polmont. One who does not have a large monument here was Dr Girdwood. He died in 1870 and was duly buried with great ceremony. The good doctor had worked for many years with the less well-off people of the area and had been instrumental in the Burgh of Falkirk obtaining its Police Act in 1859 so that its sanitation could be greatly improved. A public subscription raised over £80 to erect a monument to him, but his family preferred the monument to go into the new cemetery at Falkirk. It was decided by a committee to do so (FH 19 September 1870).

Another forgotten scholar is commemorated in Latin on stone no. 16. Robert Henry (1718-1790) was a minister who, after several charges, settled in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1776 where he remained until his death. He was a co-founder of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, but is best known as the author of the six volume "History of Great Britain on a New Plan" published in 1771. The new plan was simply the separation of the historical material into different subject areas such as ecclesiastical history, military affairs and so on. Although criticised for lack of critical analysis, Henry's compilation was very successful and earned him over £3,000.

The most famous Polmont serviceman to be killed during the First World War was James Fitz Morris. It was claimed that he had shot down 29 German planes, making him not just a fighter ace but also a national hero. As a handsome 21 year old he was of great propaganda value to the Air Ministry and so he joined a diplomatic mission to the United States to encourage its pilots to join the war effort. Unfortunately, whilst there he was killed in an air accident. He was given a state funeral on 17th August 1918 in Cincinnati – the largest funeral in the city's history with hundreds of thousands attending (Bailey 2004).

After the end of the war the wishes of Morris' parents were honoured and he was brought back to Scotland to be laid in his last resting place. He made the short journey from his home at Rosehall in Polmont Main Street to the cemetery at Polmont Parish Church on 25th October 1919. It was reported in the newspaper:

"The village was in mourning, shops were closed and blinds drawn, while the route along which the funeral procession passed was thickly lined with thousands of people, who paid a last tribute of respect to the gallant young airman. The coffin, covered with the Union Jack, on top of which the sword and cap of the deceased officer were placed, was borne on a trolley supplied by the Royal Air Force, while a party of the R.A.F., under the command of Major A.G.H. Carr, Joppa, Portobello, acted as bodyguard, and a detachment of men from the R.A.F. followed in rear. The firing party was composed of Gordon Highlanders, and a small party from the H.L.I., to which Major Morris was at one time attached, were also in attendance. A number of children from Laurieston School were also present, in charge of Mr J.B. Mather, schoolmaster, to do homage to the major, who was formerly a pupil at that school.

A short funeral service was conducted at the house by the Rev. J.B.M'Kenzie, B.D., minister of Polmont Parish Church, and thereafter the procession headed by the firing party and Laurieston Silver Band, left for the cemetery, the band playing the "Dead March" in "Saul" along the whole route. The principal mourners in the cortege were Mr James F. Morris, father of the deceased; his brothers John, Thomas, Robert, and Alex., and Messrs Robt. John and Thomas Brown, brothers-in-law; Messrs James and Robert Milne, Kilmarnock, cousins. There were also present Mr Brown, Vellore; Captain Harvie, Weedingshall; Dr Lawrie, Polmont; Captain Nisbet, Scottish Horse; Lieut. Wright, R.A.F.; Mr. Denholm, Stirling; Mr. Johnston, Grantwell, Redding; Mr A. M'P Stewart, Glasgow; Mr. J. Colville, Polmont Park; Mr D Clarkson, Avondale; Mr. J. Tweedale, Polmont Bank; Mr. Bert. Goudie, Glasgow; Mr. George Barr,, Bo'ness; Mr James Pow, Bathgate; and Messrs John Barrie, John M'Indoe, D. Anderson, and Colin Gillies, personal friends of the deceased officer, while there was also a large following of the public.

On arrival at the churchyard, where thousands had gathered to watch the closing scenes, the coffin was removed from the trolley and carried with due solemnity to the graveside by eight officers of the R.A.F. At the graveside the last rites were appropriately performed by Captain (Rev.) A. M'Kenzie, son of the parish minister, and thereafter three volleys were fired over the grave by the firing party, and the "Last Post" sounded by a bugler.

Among the large number of beautiful wreaths which were received were those from the R.A.F., H.L.I., Laurieston School, Mr Bert. Goudie, Glasgow; Mr David and Miss Tweedie, Polmont; Mr J Jamieson, Grangemouth; Mr Alex. Traill, Grangemouth; Miss Jean Thomson, Grangemouth; Dr Grant, Polmont; Miss Samuels, Brightons, Polmont; Mrs Johnston, Polmont Park; Dr and Mrs Laurie, Polmont... and a handsome aeroplane wreath was contributed by the deceased's father and mother." (Falkirk Herald 1 November 1919.)

In 1923 disaster struck at the Redding Pit when the underground workings flooded and 40 men lost their lives. At least 22 of these were buried in the churchyard at Polmont – each cortege solemnly processing through the streets of their home village to the burial place. Those known to have followed this route were:

Many of these are buried in the newer part of the cemetery and are not recorded here. Those in the older section include Thomas Brown (No. 391) whose date of death is given as "on or about 17th October 1923. Colin Maxwell and his two sons, Walter and Colin, are also here (No. 508). Coal mining was always dangerous and John Muirhead died in the same pit, No. 23, on another earlier occasion in 1912 (No. 603). Matthew Forsyth was killed in another of the colliery's pits, No. 16 (No. 143).

The Stones

The most famous of the stones in the graveyard are the two "Temptation" stones depicting Adam and Eve beside the apple tree with a snake entwined around the trunk. Eve hands Adam an apple (Nos 374 and 514). This is an appropriate symbol as this act led to the introduction of mortality into the Garden of Eden. Each also has the inscription "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these" taken from Matthew 6.29 or Luke 12.27 in which Jesus refers to even the lilies of the field being well furnished with external coats. The flowers beside the tree may represent these. Gardener's tools are also evident – a spade, pruning knife, rake, and scythe. Fruit tree, flowers, tools and quotation are thus suitable for the head gardener of an estate.

No. 374 in the local sandstone appears to be the earlier of the two but bears the date 1796. It is similar to one from Falkirk which also has the serpent handing an apple to Eve. The Falkirk stone commemorated the gardener for Callendar House who died in 1750, which seems to be a more appropriate date for that at Polmont. The two were almost certainly carved by the same mason (Bailey 2010, 24). No 514 has the date 1754 carved along the top which is more elaborately finished.

Illus 9: The two Temptation stones Nos. 374 and 514.

Gardener's tools also occur on stone no. 725, without the scene in the Garden of Eden. The snake also appears along one edge of No. 239, though the scythe on this stone represents the grim reaper rather than a gardener. The Garden of Eden is again referred to on stone No. 270. Here a variation of 1 Corinthians 15.22 is combined with parts from Genesis to read "Who by Adam's all man was brought lo/ From Jeffes Steem the tree of life doth gro/ To deaths not death to those in Christ/ that die to ly/ yea evn when they Desolved in dust/ They rest in hopst the morning draws near/ When all the Lainls in Glory/ shall appear". The Tree of Life was in the centre of the Garden and may have been the same as the Tree of Learning from which Eve picked the apple.

The legendary "green man" can be found on many of the stones at Polmont. It is a pagan symbol that occurs infrequently throughout Europe and re-appeared in Scotland in the 18th century. At Polmont it often occurs as a facemask at the top of a wreath with foliage spewing from its mouth (no. 478 is a great example with snakes; nos 239, 286 & 355).
