It was brought astern; full steam was made, and a SOS call was sent giving ship's position. At 3.30pm the submarine opened fire, approximat e range 15,000 yards. The ship replied, and used her smoke boxes. She was heading into the wind's eye. At 3.40pm the ship ceased firing, as the submarine was out of range, but the submarine continued firing. During the next two hours the ship replied to the fire at intervals, but the submarine was out of range all the time. At 5.40pm the submarine ceased firing, and dropped astern, having fired around 130 rounds. At 6.5 the submarine resumed firing. Smoke boxes were used by the ship and proved very effective, and she was manoeuvred so as to avoid the shelling from the submarine/ ... next Page

/ Continued: At 6.30pm the ship was hit and one of the crew wounded. At 6.40pm a few shots were fired from the ship, but the submarine was still out of range. At 7.40pm the submarine ceased fire, having fired during the second attack 71 rounds, to which the ship replied with 11. At 9.30pm the submarine was lost sight of, and the ship was put on a zig zag course at full speed throughout the ensuing night to avoid torpedo attack. In the morning her course to the west was resumed, there being no signs of the enemy. During the two attacks the submarine fired in all about 200 rounds and the ship replied with 38. No serious damage was done to the ship."
